CCHR PRESS RELEASE - Phnom Penh, 3 November 2026

The Cambodian Center for Human Rights (CCHR) marks the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists

In 2013, the United Nations General Assembly adopted and proclaimed 2 November as the "International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists". This resolution urged Member States to implement definitive measures to counter the prevailing culture of impunity. It condemns all attacks and violence against journalists and media workers, calling on Member States to do their utmost to prevent violence, ensure accountability, bring perpetrators to justice and ensure that victims have access to appropriate remedies. It further calls upon States to promote a safe and enabling environment for journalists to perform their work independently and without undue interference.

Since 1994, at least 15 journalists have been killed in Cambodia in connection with their work, most recently in 2024 when an environmental journalist was fatally shot while investigating illegal logging for which the perpetrator was sentenced to 12 years in prison. At the time of their deaths, 12 of them were reporting on sensitive issues involving powerful individuals, officials, or state institutions. To this date, no effective, independent, and transparent investigations have been conducted to bring the perpetrators of these egregious crimes to justice. Many of these cases remain unresolved, and the victims are denied the justice they deserve while their perpetrators continue to enjoy impunity.

Reflecting on the persistent impunity for crimes against journalists and human rights defenders in Cambodia, CCHR's Executive Director, Mr. Seng Sovathana, stated:

"Impunity not only denies justice to victims and their families; it also undermines the rights and freedoms of everyone. When attacks against journalists and human rights defenders go unpunished, they silence critical voices, weaken accountability, and discourage others from speaking out. Every attack must be investigated independently and transparently, and those responsible must be brought to justice".

To mark the International Day to End Impunity for Crimes against Journalists 2026, CCHR will conduct an online campaign from 05 November to 13 November 2026. Through various activities, the campaign aims to raise awareness of and call for the end of impunity. By highlighting documented cases, CCHR also seeks to advocate for accountability and justice for victims and their families.
